HAY JOB EVALUATION SYSTEM

and

GNWT JOB EVALUATION PROCESS

The Hay Job Evaluation System meets the criteria in the Canadian Human Rights Act for the use of "skill", "effort", "responsibility", and "working conditions" to assess the value of work performed.

At the last round of collective bargaining the Union of Northern Worker's (UNW) pay equity spokesperson acknowledged that the Hay Job Evaluation System is a gender neutral and bias free system.

At the last round of collective bargaining the UNW pay equity spokesperson said that the UNW's objections were with the processes followed by the GNWT and alleged that the GNWT implemented a modified version of the Hay Job Evaluation System. The UNW's concerns were based on misunderstandings and misinterpretations which would have been clarified had the UNW Bargaining Committee honored an agreement to do a joint review of the point ratings with the GNWT Bargaining Committee and the Interdepartmental Job Evaluation Committee.

The GNWT implemented the Hay Job Evaluation System without modification. All factors in the Hay Job Evaluation System were used to evaluate positions including the benchmark positions. A short profile method was then introduced and used in conjunction with benchmark positions to ensure consistency in evaluations across the GNWT. The short profile method also provides a more efficient method of evaluating jobs. However, all factors are used to evaluate positions when issues are identified that require an in-depth analysis.

Great care was taken to select representative benchmark positions. This process was not rushed as alleged by the UNW. The benchmark positions were selected by trained departmental committees based on their knowledge of the jobs they had evaluated over the course of several months. The benchmark positions were evaluated by a gender balanced and trained interdepartmental committee to ensure a common understanding of jobs and consistency throughout the GNWT.

Objective information about jobs was used to avoid gender biases contrary to the UNW's allegations. The most current job descriptions were used. The evaluators obtained additional information if job content information was outdated. All managers and employees were asked to confirm that the job content used in the evaluation process is valid. This process is ongoing.

Care was taken to ensure evaluators did not bring their biases about the old system to the evaluation process contrary to the UNW's allegation. FMBS staff who evaluated jobs using the old system was not involved in evaluating jobs on the new system. Departmental employees who had little or no exposure to the old system were trained to evaluate jobs using the Hay Job Evaluation System.

The UNW wrongly alleged that the women on the job evaluation committees took on male characteristics because they worked with managers.

The GNWT followed a gender neutral process in evaluating positions. In addition, the point ratings were made available to all managers and employees. They were asked to satisfy themselves that the job content was valid for all positions and that the point ratings are appropriate. An informal non-adversarial process has been put in place for managers and employees to resolve any concerns they may have. A special review process is provided in the Final Settlement Offer for employees to resolve any concerns that may still be outstanding after implementation.

The only component of the process that is missing is UNW participation. However, the lack of UNW involvement in this important initiative is of the UNW's choosing. The UNW has been given ample opportunity to become contributory participants.

The preference is to have the UNW involved in this important initiative. The UNW is a party to the Collective Agreement. The UNW and the GNWT, in good faith, negotiated the rates of pay that the UNW allege discriminate against women. It is appropriate that the UNW and the GNWT work together to fix the problems they created at collective bargaining.

UNW involvement does not, however, guarantee success of the initiative or make the process gender neutral. The UNW was involved in an earlier joint job evaluation initiative that ended in failure. The Canadian Human Rights Act places the responsibility on the Employer to have a job evaluation system that uses skill, effort, responsibility and working conditions to assess the value of work performed. The Collective Agreement places the responsibility on the employer to ensure that employees have a current and accurate statement of duties. These are the essential elements of a bias free job evaluation system.

The Final Settlement Offer provides two process that involves UNW participation to ensure that the point ratings remain bias free following implementation. The point ratings for positions in the UNW bargaining unit are attached. The Final Settlement Offer provides for the implementation of the Hay Job Evaluation System at absolutely no risk to the UNW and employees. Employees pay will remain the same or increase if the point ratings for their positions change after implementation. No employees will have their pay reduced.

In summary, the parties agree that the Hay Job Evaluation System is Gender Neutral or bias free. The GNWT is satisfied that the process used to evaluate jobs is bias free and that the resulting point ratings are bias free. The GNWT is confident that the UNW would also have satisfied itself that the process and point rating results are bias free had it taken advantage of the opportunities to work with the GNWT as contributory participants. The Final Settlement Offer provides for the implementation of the Hay Job Evaluation System with absolutely no down side risk to employees or the UNW. Employees pay will be protected or increased. No employees will have their pay decreased. The Final Settlement Offer provides two processes. One process will ensure that any outstanding concerns with point ratings are addressed after implementation. The other process will ensure that a bias free system is maintained into the future.
